

Biography of Mr. Tyson Slocum
Research Director
Public Citizen's Energy Program

Tyson Slocum is the Research Director for Public Citizen's Energy Program. Public Citizen is a 30-year old consumer advocacy organization. Tyson promotes stronger regulation of energy markets, examining the impact of mergers and lax regulations over electricity, petroleum & natural gas and monitoring federal legislation on energy issues. Tyson researches the influence of corporate special interests on our political system and works to promote corporate & government accountability. Tyson has authored numerous reports on these subjects, presenting his findings in testimony before the U.S. Congress. In addition, Tyson appears regularly on Fox News, CNN and in print media like the Wall Street Journal and The New York Times. Tyson received his B.A. from the University of Texas at Austin and grew up in Rhode Island.